“It’s strange, the way memories resurface —
this past weekend, surrounded by family, and yet, something in the air felt incomplete.

*I thought of the day we played “colored eggs,”
the same day you hit your head at the shop.
Of the nights we lit things on fire and sent them flying down the driveway with Kenny, our laughter chasing sparks into the dark.*

I can still see us running wild around the barn and pasture — reckless, fearless, untouched by the heaviness we’d one day come to know.

*We have lost everyone that played the colored egg game
We had no idea.
I had no idea I’d be the last one left from that game.
I never asked to be.*

*You were supposed to be here —
to help our parents as they aged,
to share the years, the memories, the weight of it all.*

*Now, when I think of those days —
the shop, the farm, the laughter echoing through that little house in Muskogee — my heart aches with both love and longing.*

*You will never be forgotten.
You will always be missed.
And I promise to live every day in honor of you —
to fill the time I have left with meaning, hoping somewhere, somehow,
you’re watching... and proud.*
