“ Remembering fondly an uncle who was warm and welcoming, happy and humble, a good bit mischievous, hard-working and playful. He owned hands strong enough to lift hay bales, sacks of feed, wood, rocks and steel yet tender enough to cradle the many babies that came to his arms and heart throughout the years. He was deeply devoted to his beloved Eunice with whom he shared a lifetime beginning with carefree school days together and ending with the beautiful joys and challenges of the golden years. Together they raised a very loving, close-knit family who mostly lived nearby, giving them such happiness and contentment. Uncle Mickey was happiest in their company and anyone else who dropped by their home where the door was always open and filled with generous amounts of delicious food, constant laughter and interesting story telling.

He was a master craftsman, building beautiful homes for his children and many others, including his own home. He found great pleasure in creating and crafting countless rocking horses, bread boxes, hope chests, quilt racks, porch swings, ornaments and wooden figurines that graced many of our homes. He was a fireman serving, sacrificing and helping so many throughout the years. He delighted in play and pranks, surprising and scaring many kids and adults throughout the years on Halloween. Playing cards and popping “corn” were favorite pastimes as much as visits from any and everyone. He made all feel like part of his family, sharing and caring for us as his own. He was like a big kid or brother who often wrestled on the floor and rode motorcycles with his sons , (water skied at times barefoot and without a life-vest) yet often tenderly playing dolls or games with his daughter and somehow allowing nieces to curl and play endlessly with his hair.

Abundant love, grit, strength, generosity and goodness lay deep within such a genuine family man. My childhood included many wonderful moments with him that I will always treasure. Wishing the love and laughter that was such a huge part of his life will now become a peaceful comforting remembrance to the many who loved him. Much love from Belles family
